

Mammography Facilities in Idaho by District and County

Idaho Women's Health Check

This document includes information on where to locate a mammography facility in your area. Keep in mind that, although Idaho Women's Health Check covers breast and cervical cancer screening services for all the counties listed in this document, not all counties have a mammography facility available. Therefore, we included the contact information of the health district nearest you that can help to determine the best location for a mammography facility based on your residence.

What is a mammogram?

A mammogram is a low-dose X-ray of the breast. Doctors use mammograms to look for early signs of breast cancer. Regular screening mammograms are the best test doctors have to find breast cancer early. Having regular screening mammograms can lower the risk of dying from breast cancer.

Some advice to help you prepare for a mammogram:

- Schedule the test for a time when your breasts are least likely to be tender (the week before and after your period)
- Bring your prior mammogram images, if you have had previous mammograms
- Don't use any deodorant, antiperspirants, powders, lotions, creams or perfumes under your arms or on your breasts before your mammogram (metallic particles in powders and deodorants could be visible on your mammogram and cause confusion)

What to expect during a mammogram?

- At the testing facility, you're given a gown and asked to remove neck jewelry and clothing from the waist up. To make this easier, wear a two-piece outfit that day.
- For the procedure itself, you stand in front of an X-ray machine specially designed for mammography. The technician places one of your breasts on a platform and raises or lowers the platform to match your height. The technician helps you position your head, arms and torso to allow a clear view of your breast.
- Your breast is gradually pressed against the platform by a clear plastic plate. Pressure is applied for a few seconds to spread out the breast tissue. The pressure isn't harmful, but you may find it uncomfortable or even painful. If you have too much discomfort, tell the technician.
- Your breast must be compressed to even out its thickness and permit the X-rays to penetrate the breast tissue. The pressure also holds your breast still to decrease blurring from movement and reduces the dose of radiation needed. During the brief X-ray exposure, you'll be asked to stand still and hold your breath.

After the test

- After images are made of both your breasts, you may be asked to wait while the technician checks the quality of the images. If the views are inadequate for technical reasons, you may have to repeat part of the test. The entire procedure usually takes less than 30 minutes. Afterward, you may dress and resume normal activity.
- In the United States, federal law requires mammogram facilities to send your results within 30 days, but you can usually expect to receive your results sooner. Ask the technician what you can expect.
